

A Scothern Garden

The Year of Covid will be the year I finally got to grips with my garden and, even if it is still rather like the “Curate’s Egg - good in parts” I am quite proud of what I’ve been able to achieve. It’s been great fun and rather therapeutic to spend days working in the garden, especially during the wonderful sunny spell we had a while ago.

The great thing about gardening in these circumstances, has been getting to know my neighbours more closely (social distancing, of course) exchanging advice and swapping plants, knowing that they will grow in your garden soil!

The garden is still very much a ‘work in progress’ and I’m sure, come the autumn, I’ll be moving plants around and generally making changes to make it even better in 2021. Until then, if we only get a little more sunshine, I will just sit and admire it!
